

Medical Equipment & Supplies (continued)

The aging population is already influencing the future direction of the medical device industry due to their changing health needs and an accompanying shift in thinking on how and where seniors will be treated. Baby boomers are living longer lives than previous generations, requiring more sophisticated and longer-term healthcare. This has driven the need for advanced medical electronic devices and raised expectations that new technologies will enhance the quality and length of patients' lives as they get older. As the US population increases and pressure to contain costs increase, expensive hospital stays will be discouraged and health care will be increasingly delivered in alternative settings, such as nursing homes, hospices and patients' homes. As a result, home health care products are expected to become one of the fastest growing segments of the $6 billion medical device industry. In recent years these products have become more sophisticated and are now used in a wider variety of situations.

Standard Products

Manual wheelchairs, mobility aids, home care beds, low air loss therapy products, bath safety products, patient transport equipment

Rehab Products

Power wheelchairs, custom manual wheelchairs, high-performance sports and recreation wheelchairs, scooters, seating and positioning products, motor controllers

Respiratory Products

Oxygen concentrators, nebulizer compressors and respiratory disposables, sleep therapy products, portable oxygen systems

Medical Supplies

Distributor of ostomy, incontinence, diabetic, skin and wound care products Many community resources and agencies (i.e. Red Cross) loan medical supplies such as crutches, canes, walkers, wheelchairs, hospital beds and T.E.N.S. machines, for short-term medical needs. If the need is short term, clients should attempt to access other resources as this benefit is intended for items needed on a long-term basis.

Two Years...

That's how long I had been trapped inside my house, unable to do much of anything. It only took two hours to set me free!

American Ramp

Systems installed a durable, non-skid steel ramp at my home.

No concrete. No permits.

The first thing I did?

My nurse and I went out for a slice of pizza!
